As an under-represented group in the economics profession worldwide, we would like to invite all eligible female economists to submit their innovative and creative work as part of our poster session which will take place at the CEBRA annual meeting on Thursday 6 July at Columbia SIPA in New York City. This session is being organised by the Bank of Israel.

Topics being sought: The session is open to submissions from a broad range of topics with a particular interest in macro-economic issues relevant for economic policy, with a focus on central bank policy, and empirical economic research.

Eligibility criteria:

This poster session is designed specifically at early career women in economics. Female authors should be graduate students or no more than 3 years past a PhD defence, with a preference given to economists working with central banks or international institutions.
